Can it not be set down as a fact that this tardiness and blocking of justice encouraged the midnight burglar who stood over a New York physician the other night, with upraised blade, domanding money or life?

The execution of JAMES SLOCUM, Who beat his wife to death in this city, was delayed two years by the efforts of jugglers-at-law. He lived, perhaps, the most comfortable life he had known while the quibbling with legal phrases was going on.

If he and SMILER, the other wife-murderer, had been promptly and summarily dealt with, under a wisely drawn law, would it have had a deterrent effect upon | JACOB LENZ, who last night beat his wife | about Christopher Columbus. to death in his Fourteenth street home? These questions are extremely perti-

A PEACEFUL SELF-MURDER.

"Doad, ladies and gentlemen." That simple little legend on a slip of great gons. paper pluned against the head-board of her bed. On the couch, stretched gracefully at length, clad in a landsome black satin dress, lay her body. The life race of ADELAIDE DREW had been ron. "Life has no pleasure for me. I don't desire to live," she had written on another slip of paper.

The race seems to have been one with care and grief, and it had been lost. Yet the girl had run it gracefully, and she yielded, as she thought, becomingly. She had died of poisoning, but paintessly. The hands which had penned the little notes lay gently clasped across her breast. She rested as one really asleep.

There was nothing dreadful about this suicide, though its occurrence sadly shocked the little town of Isleboro, Me. Many troubled hearts would have envied the dead girl her quiet sleep. Yet this was murder-the murder of self. And the victim left mother and friends to bear the grief of it. Was she generous in her own grief?

SILENCE FOR A MOTHER'S SAKE.

There is a fine point of ethics about the ase in Wisconsin of the young man whose mother has just confessed on her deathbed to having killed his wife. The son had been suspected of the murder for nine years, and while knowing his mother to be guilty would not betray her. To have sacrificed his mother would not have brought back the dead wife. To sacrifice himself for his mother's sake was the natural prompting of a dutiful son, in the face of which he would not pause to think of the right of society to have its real criminals detected and punished. The thought of revenge for the death of a dear one was evidently lacking or too weak to accomplish a purpose. And as for duty to the wife who was dend, is it not possible that he that he believed she would have urged him to the very course he has taken?

For twenty-four hours Bellevue doctors had under their charge a man who was set down as drunk, and who had what appeared to be a scratch under one eye.

The patient surprised them by dying on their hands last night. Then they examined his case more closely. He had for special and official inquiry.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," So ruminated a passenger on a Hoboken ferryboat last evening at witnessing a touching incident. An express wagon wife?

Industry up a few minutes before and deposited an emigrant, his wife, babes and household belongings on the pier. The emigrant wife?

Miss Wayting (in her most captivating tonn)—Oh, it is unnecessary to go to that expense, even now, Mr. de Laie. Brides are given away, you know. grant got part of his goods aboard the boat when the signal whistle was given. He was frantic with fright lest he should lose some of them, when a few passengers and two deckhands rushed to his assistance and quickly transferred them to the boat. The poor emigrant-he was Polish-could not express his thanks in English, but they beamed out of his eyes. At the landing stage the same operation was repeated and the stranger put aboard gloves or mitts to wear during the warm the train, without one of his helpers thinking weather. Black shors and Oxford ties and that he had done anything else but his duty.

A big publishing firm is confessedly in diffiulties, and there is a surpri in store for several authors and for the book market in eneral. The book trade, I am told, has been fearfully duli this year so far. There have seen very few successes, and the ledgers of caught cheating at cards most of the publishers tell distressing stories.

Mr. Alexander, of the Coleman stand, who handles nearly all the current publications, is particularly popular with the various authors, who pass around to see how their works are "going."
